

I completed three separate tests; Myers-Briggs a Personality Trait test, and a Learning Style Test.

These tests show an aspect of me which i did not think about and know of. However i do not believe in these tests as to me, each individual is different and unique in their own way and can not be grouped into categories or personality traits such as these. Therefore the results of these test does not uphold any significance to me. These results could make me a great team member who can contribute or even effectively lead a team if put in the position to do so. However i still believe that the results of these tests will not have a significant role in my ability to help my group mates. When forming a team i should be able to work with almost anyone as i can give an input with any sort of teammates i am given.

You are an Auditory learner! Check out the information below, or view all of the learning styles.

Auditory

If you are an auditory learner, you learn by hearing and listening. You understand and remember things you have heard. You store information by the way it sounds, and you have an easier time understanding spoken instructions than written ones. You often learn by reading out loud because you have to hear it or speak it in order to know it.

As an auditory learner, you probably hum or talk to yourself or others if you become bored. People may think you are not paying attention, even though you may be hearing and understanding everything being said.

Here are some things that auditory learners like you can do to learn better.

- Sit where you can hear.
- Have your hearing checked on a regular basis.
- Use flashcards to learn new words; read them out loud.
- Read stories, assignments, or directions out loud.
- Record yourself spelling words and then listen to the recording.
- Have test questions read to you out loud.
- Study new material by reading it out loud.

Remember that you need to hear things, not just see things, in order to learn well.
